Yesterday, when I was playing in a park, I saw a watch on the path. It didn't show time but there was a big red button on it. When I pressed it, it sends me back to 1958, 65 years ago. In front of me was a school, and it was Shung Tak Catholic English College. But it wasn't an ordinary day, it was their Opening Day.

When I walked into the school, I saw a team of kid's anxious faces in the hallway. I walked up to them and asked them what was wrong, they told me that they were going to perform the ballet "Swan Lake" on the Opening Ceremony but their pianist had a stomachache so he couldn't perform. They couldn't dance to the beat without the piano playing.

However, I remembered that I played 'Swan Lake' in piano lesson before, so I offered to help them. They were so thankful for my offer, and I accepted it. They gave me the music sheets and script. We had rehearsal a few times and it was time to perform. We started walking onto the stage and we were all very nervous, but we got over our nerves. We introduced ourselves and started the performance. After we finished performing, the audience began to applaud and cheered for us!

Next, the ballet dancers thanked me for helping them perform, they showed me around their school. They showed me their classrooms, with furniture that was made of wood and looked very classical; a ceiling fan provided airflow, but it was noisy, we are lucky that our school has air-conditioning; their playground was a grass field, and it was different from my school's playground which has a cement surface; their teachers dressed like people did in the 60s and many more. Everything looked so old and weird (at least that's what I thought).

Everyone had a great day in the end, and I had an awesome experience exploring schools in the past. Suddenly, I heard someone call my name...my watch shined and teleported me back to the present. I found out that I was in the park just like when I teleported to the past and mom was asking me home. There was a ladybird on the top of the watch. It was all just like a dream.
